“After 25 years of working in clay, utility continues to serve as the foundation for my ideas. The pots I make, no matter how simple or complex, are meant to be experienced on a physical and visual level. The way an object carries, lifts, cradles, pours and contains are properties which I strive to make engaging for the user, offering more than just convenience.”

Bruce works on the wheel using stoneware, altering and cutting the work. He is essentially a functional potter. A Teacher since 1978 at Sheridan College, he is currently head of the Ceramics Department. has participated in numerous solo as well as group exhibitions, 80 workshops and lectures, and his work can be found in numerous permanent collections.
